FAITH & FLOWER

DAREDEVIL DRINKS

Written by Cleo Tobbi &
Photographed by Janica De Guzman & Eslee

One of Downtown's more recent additions, Faith & Flower mixes the past with present in design and taste. Tall ceilings and pristine decor greet all who enter; the grandiose furnishing hits as you attempt to consume the entire restaurant at once. You can watch as the écailler prepares a plate of half dozen oysters and Littleneck clams at the raw bar by the door. Emerald goblets on the tables smile against the muted tones of the tables and drapes.

As beautiful as the fine dining establishment presents itself, nothing compares to the beauty of their signature drink: The Leap of Faith. Aiming to salute the past with its cocktail program, Faith & Flower adds to the many bars looking to revive the classic cocktails of the Pre-Prohibition Era. This specialty cocktail, made table-side, incorporates each one of the senses as the bartender puts on a show of fire and spirit.

As house root beer sits over ice, the bartender ignites a snifter of absinthe with a long match. A blue flame fills the glass and the daring bartender begins to pour the liquid and flame atop the idle root beer. The "leap of faith" comes as the bartender lifts the flaming glass higher as he pours, creating a stream of fire between the glasses. The spectacle dazzles in showmanship and taste.

The combination of intense, anise flavor from the absinthe and warm candy notes from the house-made root beer blend together in unexpected harmony. Traditionally, bartenders dilute absinthe with water and a sugar cube but the layers of flavor that come from the sweet root beer act as a charming replacement.

Between watching the show, hearing the gasps, smelling the vapor, and feeling the heat, The Leap of Faith is a true treat for the senses. Naturally, it is found in Downtown LA. To find out more, go to: faithandflowerla.com

TEASE IF YOU PLEASE

FULFILL ELEGANT VICES

Written by Janica De Guzman & Photographed by Christian Thomas

It's a Friday night — you're dressed to the nines and you search through two layers of secrecy to discover a realm of 1930s glamour for a tasteful teasing. Tease If You Please is a twice-monthly show featuring six uniquely, sexy dancers who showcase the allure of burlesque for a sensual trip down carnal lane.

Within an unassuming vegan restaurant hides Bar Fedora, an intimate and smoky bar with an art deco charm. There you will find a velvet curtain that separates the real world from a provocative sanctuary — step behind the curtain and bear witness to fulfill elegant vices.

EACH DANCER PERFORMS THEIR OWN ROUTINE THAT TAKES AN AUDIENCE THROUGH A SPECTRUM OF SEX APPEAL.

Burlesque is a theatrical experience that marries art to temptation. Each dancer performs their own routine that takes an audience through a spectrum of sex appeal. From powder pink innocence to hot wax naughty — the uninhibited seduction of burlesque keeps jaws dropped.

It's 9:30 pm and the room is filled with eager patrons — romantic couples, a bachelorette party and a group of young gentlemen. Chatter and cheer increased with anticipation for the reveal of Miss Donna Hood, dancer and show producer. Taking her experiences from dancing alongside the modern queen of burlesque, Dita Von Teese, Miss Hood created Tease If You Please — and within a year, the sought after show gained respect as one of Downtown's hidden secrets.

Miss Hood entered the spot lit stage in a long gown dripping in jewels, she held a bottle of champagne and turned to reveal coy smile. She sashayed to the rhythm of cabaret and unveiled her glittered garment piece by piece. A peek of her shoulder had the crowd in a tizzy but a heavy douse of champagne over her bare body had the crowd fevering with desire.

Tease If You Please never repeats the same show twice. It's handpicked cast features professionally trained dancers with that "je ne sais quoi" attitude. For $30 a ticket, guests have a reason to get fancy and revel a performance full of comedy, dance and visual fascination.

OLDE GOOD THINGS

QUIRKY ANTIQUES GALORE

Written by Kenny Ng & Photographed by Tessa Neustadt

Olde Good Things is an architectural antique store located near the industrial end of downtown, just barely south of the 10. The white brick building with large pane windows and regal columns sits on the corner under a clear blue sky, like an estate sale filtered through a daydream. They save artifacts and antiques from landfills and pre-Depression era buildings, and oftentimes restore them with care before turning pieces over to designers and collectors.

"We do a lot of restaurants. The movie thing has slowed down for us — we used to do a lot of rentals and purchases for movies. But from what I've seen, and heard, there's not a lot of movie stuff the way it used to be," says Jay, one of the owners who just moved to Los Angeles from New York.

Though big ticket items found here might not be right for small-scale apartments, if you have the means and need to fill the corners of a loft space, or the skeleton of a film set, Olde Good Things might be your best option in this city. They share a 100,000 sq. ft. warehouse with their other nine stores, alongside three acres filled with salvaged objects and materials — one of the largest inventory of old, good things in the country.

The downtown location is a Home Depot caught in a wormhole, a concrete box of oversized knickknacks and atypical furnishings stuffed inside a brick-and-mortar flea. The giant two-piece bronze statue of Icarus in his wings, approaching the sun, was sculpted by artist Frank Eliscu, who also created the Heisman Trophy. It sat near a working 1960s terminal light from American Airlines at JFK, and a well-maintained cherry wood phone booth that lights up when the accordion glass door is pushed open.

The showroom of mismatched treasures acts as an exhibition of things from lives gone by, a collection built purely from other people's choices. If you had been looking for a vintage ice cream cart, a pair of sinned-in church pews, or a lot of loose doorknobs, this might be the universe trying to give a little bit back.

GENERAL LEE'S

CHINATOWN'S BEST KEPT SECRET

Written by Rayna Jensen & Photographed by Michael De La Madrid

Even after finally opening its doors to the public late last year, Chinatown's General Lee's is still the LA bar scene's best kept secret. It's an adventure to find even if you know where to look — tucked away in a wide alley, marked by one red bench out front and a tiny neon marquee above the doorway. But General Lee's is far from intentionally exclusive.

"Ultimately, we're a place where you can just get whatever you want," says head bartender Garrett Mikkell. "I can explain the history of gin to you with one hand and pour you a vodka red bull with the other. We're here for everybody."

The inside is inherently welcoming — a second story lounge, big palm-frond drapes, wood everything. Despite the wide-open layout, it's almost cozy, like a secret tiki hut in the middle of the city. And, of course, the drinks will keep you around. The Lost Orient Sour is a good place to start: a sweet, smoky drink with Union mezcal, lemon, and black sesame syrup, reminiscent of Lapsang Souchong tea. The East is East is equally unique, a refreshing Old Fashioned-type cocktail with an Asian spin. The soft, floral notes of oolong-infused vermouth brighten the more delicate flavors of rye and cognac, and bitters play nicely with dry curaçao. These are clever drinks. At first glance, the cocktails can seem overwrought, showcasing ingredients like rose hip infused lillet blanc, white pepper tincture, and black sesame syrup, but they're insanely drinkable and far from pretentious. It's indicative of the attitude of the bar itself: just as cool as you think it is, but twice as nice. The bartenders will throw back a shot with you. The security guard will ask you how your night's going, and want to know the answer.

"I CAN EXPLAIN THE HISTORY OF GIN TO YOU WITH ONE HAND AND POUR YOU A VODKA RED BULL WITH THE OTHER. WE'RE HERE FOR EVERYBODY."

The bar's name pays homage to General Lee's Chinese restaurant, which occupied the venue from 1878 to 1985. Before it closed its doors, it was a favorite spot of Frank Sinatra and Gary Cooper. Judy Garland used to bring her little daughter, Liza Minelli, in for lunch. This incarnation of General Lee's aims to instill this same spirit again — a cool watering hole where everyone will want to come, and stay for a while.

"We want to bring back what this used to be," Mikkell says. "We're not just another high volume craft cocktail bar. We have a deep, rich history."

GOLDEN DRAGON

DIM SUM MAKES BRUNCH ADVENTUROUS

Written by Janica De Guzman &
Photographed by Michael De La Madrid & Eslee

Eating dim sum takes a bit of mental preparedness. It's loud, it's chaotic, it's overwhelming and it probes an urge to eat in excess. Golden Dragon is one of Downtown's most authentic dim sum parlors that take curious eaters through a gastronomical ride.

Dim sum is served everyday between 8am—3pm, it is between those hours that an unorchestrated parade of metal carts are pushed around tables to serve small plates of steamed baos, shu mai, bbq pork and any other bite sized Cantonese dishes. The small plates encourage sampling and sharing — and at $1.99 a plate, the price encourages eaters to max out their daily caloric intake. Dim sum makes brunch time adventurous.

Eye contact and assertiveness is necessary in order to call over the sought after shu mai cart, but don't let that intimidate you because just a simple look of perplexed curiosity will signal multiple waitresses to push their 'Zamboni of Tapas' towards your table and display an array of dishes that start new cravings. Rice noodle rolls, braised chicken feet and deep fried taro balls are revealed within the cart — just point with your chopsticks and declare quantity with your fingers. A receipt is stamped with every order; it is that receipt that symbolizes appetite because within minutes markings are accumulated and the white linen tablecloth is covered with plates and splattered with chili oil — it's like a Jackson Pollock of Eastern flavors. With dim sum there are no rules, it's a free for all for indigestion's worst nightmare. Enjoy it while you can.

Chinese New Year is celebrated throughout the month of February and there's no better time to check out Downtown's most recent hub for revitalization. Get a taste of LA culture. To find out more, call (213) 626-2039.
